The Bill of Rights

Introduction

During the ratification process of the Constitution there were some states that only agreed to the ratification if a Bill of Rights was added. This Bill of Rights would outline and guarantee certain unalienable Rights meaning that these Rights could not be transferred, given or taken away. The fact that this Bill of Rights would affirm these Rights, where most constitutions of other countries confer rights to the people is an important distinction because if these rights were granted by the state then the state could take them away. The Virginia state constitution of 1776 contained an early form of the “Bill of Rights” that drew heavily from English sources and acted as a model for other states and the U.S Constitution. On June 8th, 1789 James Madison introduced a proposed Bill of Rights to the House of Representatives. After debating over the proposal Congress approved 12 Amendments and sent them to the states for ratification. On December 15th, 1791 Virginia ratified the Bill of Rights and 10 out of the 12 proposed Amendments became part of the United States Constitution.

Congress of the United States begun and held at the City of New-York, on Wednesday the fourth of March, one thousand seven hundred and eightynine

THE Conventions of a number of the States, having at the time of their adopting the Constitution, expressed a desire, in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers, that further declaratory and restrictive clauses should be added: And as extending the ground of public confidence in the Government, will best ensure the beneficent ends of its institution

RESOLVED by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two thirds of both Houses concurring, that the following Articles be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, as amendments to the Constitution of the United States, all, or any of which Articles, when ratified by three fourths of the said Legislatures, to be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of the said Constitution; viz.

ARTICLES in addition to, and Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America, proposed by Congress, and ratified by the Legislatures of the several States, pursuant to the fifth Article of the original Constitution.

Amendment I.

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.
